Animal Helpers: Wildlife Rehabilitators By Jennifer Keats Curtis

Like humans, animals can get sick or hurt. People visit doctors. Pets see veterinarians. What happens to wild animals when they are injured, become ill, or are orphaned? Often, wildlife rehabilitators are called to their rescue. This photographic journal takes readers behind the scenes at four different wildlife rehabilitation centers. Fall in love with these backyard animals as they are nursed back to health and released back to the wild when possible. This is the first of a photographic series introducing the different ways and the many people who care for a wide variety of animals.

Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Gr 2-4-Great color photos (many spreads) of endearing young animals and impressive adult humans form a perfect backdrop for a simple text that describes the multifaceted work of wildlife rehabilitators. Speckled fawns sleeping in a playpen, infant opossums crowded in a tissue box, an indignant adult bald eagle being bandaged, and a baleful bobcat in a cage are among the critters offered as examples. The text, printed in large font, describes some of the daily experiences rehabilitators may encounter: feeding half a blueberry to a fledgling catbird, rescuing an adult osprey tangled in fishing line, returning a healthy animal to its habitat. To the joy of classroom teachers, homeschooling parents, and other adults instructing children in wildlife ecology and management, "For Creative Minds" will provide practical applications for the material in the book. An "Injured Animal True or False" has 25 questions for edification, as does a page querying real abandonment or just a parent away temporarily that gives pointers for making informed decisions. Even more resources are offered at the publisher's website, providing a tidy framework for an interdisciplinary study unit. With those appealing photos and an easy text, this book is sure to be popular, even without the additional lure of classroom/home applications.-Patricia Manning, formerly at Eastchester Public Library, NYα(c) Copyright 2011. It doesn't take long for kids to notice hurt or dead animals on the road or in the park. This photo-heavy book provides proof that some wild animals are lucky enough to be nursed back to health. From the tiny, eyeless baby opossums swaddled in a towel to a squirrel with a cast on its leg(!), readers are treated to huge, often two-page photos of animals being fed, sheltered, and rescued. The text basically follows the photos: "Beak-like tweezers are used to feed half of a blueberry to this fledgling catbird." The range of animals—raccoon, mourning dove, bobcat, osprey, and much more—is impressive. On the other hand, the variety is so wide and the situations so varied that the book could have benefited from some sort of organization. Still, the pictures say a lot, showing the modified shelters of opossums (a tissue box), fawns (a playpen), and a bunny (a cardboard box), and offering other rare glimpses, like a bald eagle undergoing surgery. Busy back matter including several quizzes concludes. Preschool-Grade 2. --Daniel Kraus
